

VIDEO: Michelle Grattan on the government's plans for Indigenous recognition

Written by Michelle Grattan, Professorial Fellow, University of Canberra

Michelle Grattan talks with University of Canberra Vice-Chancellor Professor Deep Saini about the government's proposal to put a referendum this term to recognise Indigenous Australians in the Constitution. They discuss whether Indigenous leaders are likely to make the concession to not include the Voice in the Constitution, and the chances of reaching a bipartisan agreement on the referendum question itself. They also canvass the ongoing John Setka saga.
