Dogtown Redemption is a project that is committed to making poverty and impoverished Americans more visible, and it reveals the powerful social, economic, political, artistic and scientific benefits of recycling as it follows the lives of four recyclers from various walks of life. Dogtown Redemption is a story of hope, faith, courage and love at the intersection of many lives around a single West Oakland Recycling center. Dogtown Redemption takes a journey through one of California's greatest cities and shows how a single act, recycling, can affect millions. Support from donors will help the producers of Dogtown Redemption complete the film by September and submit it to the Sundance Film Festival. The film's producers hope to stimulate a national conversation about poverty.
