

FindaFacilitator Discusses Role of Team-Building Meeting Facilitators

Written by Australian Business

NORCROSS, GA, September 05, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- Team-building has always been in high demand, and according to FindaFacilitator.com, group facilitators who help engineer team-building sessions have never been more sought after. There are several different avenues for a certified facilitator who specializes in team-building.

The most frequently desired certified master facilitators are those who operate as corporate team-building facilitators. These facilitators are able to come to a company and perform sessions with the company's various teams. Each session requires a deep knowledge of team-building strategies and activities as well as a talent for bringing groups together and opening up reluctant members.

Other team-building facilitators may work at adventure camps. Typically, these professional facilitators work within a retreat or camp-like setting which helps to take teams out of their comfort zones in order to encourage them to rely on one another. Adventure camp facilitators typically will have a specific set of activities to guide their participants through, but they must also be talented at encouraging team members to communicate openly with one another.

"If you have ever witnessed the transformation in a group brought on by a talented facilitator during a team-building session, you know that it is powerful, effective, and long-lasting," says Michael Wilkinson, CEO of Leadership Strategies, parent company of FindaFacilitator.com. "There are several different avenues a company can take within facilitated team-building, but the result is always the same: a stronger, more cohesive team with increased communication and improved productivity."
