

ATLANTA, GA, October 22, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- Many people consider hiring outside facilitators only for large conferences. However, FindaFacilitator, which helps match organizations with the best facilitator for their needs, says that the right group facilitator can help leaders and participants get the most out of just about any meeting, no matter how large or small.

Types of Meeting Facilitation

Meeting facilitators fulfill a variety of needs. No matter what you want to accomplish with your meeting, the right facilitator can help ensure that it does not get off-track, and that all views are heard.

- Strategic planning facilitation helps a group establish a plan and set measurable goals to put it into place.
- Process improvement facilitation enables organizations to develop and improve large and small processes.
- Team building facilitation allows groups to work out differences and coalesce as a team. People are often more likely to speak up to suggest ideas or voice problems when their manager is not the one leading the meeting.
- Partnering sessions where departments or organizations are working together for the first time often benefit from having a neutral person involved.
- Facilitators can also be useful when issue resolution is needed. They can help a group work through a challenge and find ideas they may not have considered.
