

ATLANTA, GA, January 11, 2014 /24-7PressRelease/ -- As a professional facilitator service, FindaFacilitator wants to help its customers in every way possible. This help begins with the website's built-in tool, Virtual Vicki. This application was designed with one purpose in mind - to make the process of finding the right facilitator for your needs as easy as possible.

Vicki can either be listened to, read via text or both. The choice is yours, but regardless of what method you choose, she will be your expert guide through the search for a group facilitator who is best qualified for your situation. The virtual program is simple to use and includes multiple predetermined questions that consist of the five P's, which are purpose, product, process, participants and probable issues.

A Step-by-step Guide for Your Facilitation Needs

Customers will be walked through each of these steps in detail and allowed to enter their responses to each in a box. The company will assess the individual answers and determine which professional facilitator in their network is most qualified. The entire process takes approximately 15 to 20 minutes, but users are allowed to skip to the end or contact customer service at any time during the session if they have a specific question they want addressed.

Toward the end of the walk through, Virtual Vicki will provide a table that illustrates the wide range of session types that are available through FindaFacilitator. These include strategic planning, project planning, project status, process improvement and data modeling to name a few.

"Our goal is to provide clients with a user-rich experience in one convenient platform," says Kris Casariego, Director of Marketing of Leadership Strategies. "Virtual Vicki has been extremely successful in this regard."
