

Nobel lectures touch on central discoveries and tantalizing findings

Written by Business News

Nobel Laureates and neuroscientists May-Britt and Edvard Moser from the Norwegian University of Science and Technology described how they made their prize-winning discovery in their Nobel lectures on Sunday 7 December. They also gave the audience a tantalizing glimpse into new findings, including the existence of speed cells in the brain, and how odours and memory are linked.

Read more <http://www.alphagalileo.org/ViewItem.aspx?ItemId=147982&CultureCode=en>