

Study finds Facebook popularity hampers fundraising efforts

Written by Business News

People with fewer friends on Facebook raise more money for charity than those with lots of connections, research by an economist at the University of Warwick has found - with the average contribution by each person dropping by two pence for every extra connection someone had on Facebook.

Read more <http://www.alphagalileo.org/ViewItem.aspx?ItemId=148461&CultureCode=en>