

NTRR Continues to Build Asset Base

Written by Australian Business

SARASOTA, Fla.--(BUSINESS WIRE)--As part of an aggressive effort to deliver exciting new nutraceutical to the booming U.S. medical marijuana (MMJ) market, Neutra Corp. (OTCBB:NTRR) announced plans today to move forward with a joint venture agreement with Second Wave Ventures, LLC, a cutting-edge developer of cannabinoid products infused with healthy nutrients.

“Second Wave has come up with some exciting new products with the potential to dramatically improve the experience of medical marijuana patients across the country”

Based in Los Angeles, Second Wave Ventures could soon assist NTRR in marketing and developing new cannabis delivery systems capable of eliminating the potentially harmful side effects associated with smoking the drug. NTRR has been conducting due diligence toward a possible agreement with Second Wave since the companies inked a letter of intent in July.

“Second Wave has come up with some exciting new products with the potential to dramatically improve the experience of medical marijuana patients across the country,” said NTRR CEO Sydney Jim. “We’re highly intrigued by the idea of partnering with them to better serve fast-growing demand for new innovations in this sector.”

In addition to new oral delivery methods, NTRR is also researching and developing nutraceutical innovations that include an advanced horticultural post-production system that could soon revolutionize the time and care needed to deliver medicinal cannabis to patients as well as a simple new system for testing MMJ oils and other substances for adulterants.

By providing innovative products and services related to MMJ, Neutra Corp. plans to follow in the footsteps of other successful public companies, including Cannabis Science, Inc. (CBIS), Medical Marijuana Inc. (MJNA) and Terra Tech Corp. (TRTC), enabling technological advancements in the cultivation and processing of cannabis in approved markets.
