

OMVS Opens Partnership Talks With Innovative Jet Travel Company

Written by Australian Business

TAMPA, Fla.--(BUSINESS WIRE)--In its quest to discover new solutions to the growing demand for business jet travel, On the Move Systems Corp. (OTCBB: OMVS) has initiated partnership discussions with an innovative company offering the latest innovation in executive air travel.

OMVS is currently in talks with a service provider that offers a private membership model to its business jet customers, affording members entry-level flight costs at per-hour rates, and the opportunity to pay only for the hours that are flown. By sharing its state-of-the-art fleet amongst a number of clients, the carrier is able to keep costs down for each member.

OMVS is exploring the possibility of sub-contracting for the carrier, offering business jet flights on its new online transportation portal now under development.

“We see this is a potentially profitable solution to meet the individual travel needs of today’s private aviation consumers,” said OMVS CEO Robert Wilson. “We’re currently discussing a possible partnership to marketing hourly pricing on light, mid and super mid-sized jets to our customers once our new platform goes live.”

Offering niche travel and transportation services—including chartered flights, chauffeur service, intermodal shipping and more—is key to OMVS’ plan to compete in the $300 billion online travel market. By connecting service providers with opportunistic travelers, OMVS plans to earn higher customer satisfaction than its larger, more established competitors in the industry.

By cultivating smart partnerships with emerging leaders in business travel and transportation, OMVS plans to compete in the online travel market alongside larger firms such as Priceline.com (NASDAQ: PCLN), TripAdvisor.com (NASDAQ: TRIP) and Expedia.com (NASDAQ: EXPE).
