

TAMPA, Fla.--(BUSINESS WIRE)--In its quest to offer the best cargo shipping options on the Web, On the Move Systems Corp. (OTCBB: OMVS) is currently negotiating a development agreement with a Florida-based transport company offering shipping to the Bahamas and Cuba.

OMVS has been scouting promising intermodal freight transport companies for potential partnership and acquisition since August. The company is working to revolutionize the way cargo transport services are bought and sold by developing a new online platform that applies the same business model used by companies such as Expedia, Travelocity and more to travel and transportation options not offered by its larger competitors.

Partnering with established, successful intermodal transport provider represents a major step forward for OMVS in achieving its goals, says OMVS CEO Robert Wilson.

"The company we're in talks with is a successful, growth-oriented company that can offer services that customers want, but can't easily get online," he said. "Offering options unavailable elsewhere is what's going to make our new online transportation portal a success."

By delivering easy, round-the-clock access to niche service providers, OMVS plans to market new technology solutions that will allow it to compete in the online transportation market alongside Priceline.com (NASDAQ: PCLN), TripAdvisor.com (NASDAQ: TRIP) and Expedia.com (NASDAQ: EXPE).
