

BALTIMORE, Oct. 10, 2013 /PRNewswire/ -- Boyd Group International will bring its 18th Annual International Aviation Forecast Summit to Baltimore from November 3-5. Baltimore/Washington International Thurgood Marshall Airport (BWI Marshall) will join the leading aviation forecast and consulting firm in welcoming industry leaders from around the world for the conference.

"The Summit is the number one aviation forecast event, and it's fitting to hold it in Baltimore, one of North America's most future-focused cities," said Michael Boyd, President & CEO of Boyd Group International.

The 18th Annual International Aviation Forecast Summit will feature information, data and forecasts from leaders across the aviation spectrum. Among the presenters will be: Dave Barger, CEO of JetBlue; Ben Baldanza, CEO of Spirit; David Cush of Virgin America; Willie Walsh CEO of British Airways/IAG; David Neeleman, CEO of Azul; Jim Compton, Vice Chairman of United; as well as senior executives from American, Delta, Southwest, Allegiant, Air China, Korean, Air Berlin, Japan Airlines, SAA, Wall Street financial analysts, and more. In addition, senior executives from all of the major aircraft manufacturers –Airbus, Boeing, Bombardier, Embraer, and Mitsubishi – will be presenting their forecasts of what airports can expect to see at gates in the next decade.

The Boyd Group International Aviation Forecast Summit focuses on key futurist dynamics facing the aviation industry, and delivers forecasts of airport traffic, fleet and airliner demand, and in-depth reviews of the key emerging trends in the industry.
