

SACRAMENTO, Calif., Sept. 19, 2013 /PRNewswire/ -- Andrea Weiss, MS, National Certified Counselor and Master Career Counselor with an office in the Sacramento region (Davis, CA) was recently awarded the Myers-Briggs Master Practitioner and Workshop Facilitator designation, a special credential that signifies her advanced level of knowledge related to psychological type and the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI) assessment. The MBTI Master Practitioner designation is only available to those who have met the highest level of expertise and experience in using the MBTI instrument. Fewer than 200 people throughout the US and Canada have received this recognition.

Ms. Weiss is well versed in using the MBTI as a learning and development tool with organizations looking to improve communication, build effective teams, enhance group interactions, and develop employees and individuals seeking guidance with career planning and job transitions.

Ms. Weiss has over twenty years of experience in career counseling, outplacement, training and executive search. As a career counselor she has helped hundreds of individuals by providing personalized confidential career counseling services to identify and pursue satisfying careers, manage successful career transitions and take advantage of new opportunities. Her experience also includes designing and delivering employee development workshops on a variety of topics including career management, employee recruitment, change management, job search skills, and work-life balance. In addition, she is an expert in all phases of the recruitment process, having conducted a wide range of employee recruitments for public and nonprofit sector clients.

Ms. Weiss earned a Master's degree in Career Counseling from California State University, Sacramento and a Bachelor's degree in International Relations from the University of California, Davis
