) While investigating the efficacy of Xeomin, an injectable medication treating cervical dystonia and glabellar (between the eyebrows) frown lines, vanguard publication Insider Beauty Buzz sought the expert opinion of Mayoral Dermatology's

. As one of Coral Gable's most popular cosmetic dermatologists, Dr. Vega is also knowledgeable concerning the latest advances emerging from the field of skin aesthetics and laser therapies to improve the appearance of damaged skin. In pursuit of understanding why Xeomin is different from numerous other wrinkle-releasing injectables, Insider Beauty Buzz posed this question to Dr. Vega.

According to Dr. Vega, Xeomin resembles other products containing incobotulinumtoxin A, or botulinum toxin type A, in its ability to "freeze" muscles by preventing them from contracting and producing deep wrinkles. However, she advised Insider Beauty Buzz that people who are not satisfied with the results they are seeing from their current neurotoxin should give Xeomin a try Botulinum toxin type A develops when Clostridium botulinum is fermented, purified and then separated from proteins. A white powder that is injected into the muscles following reconstitution with preservative-free saline, Xeomin reduces the appearance of glabellar lines related to procerus and corrugator muscle contractions. Additionally, people suffering from involuntary eye muscle contractions called blepharospasm find relief when using Xeomin to stop twitching that is severe enough to force the eyelids shut.

An investigative reporter working for Insider Beauty Buzz had Dr. Vega inject the area between her brows, her forehead and around her eyes with Xeomin to personally experience the results of this innovative wrinkle relaxer.

After five days, the reporter was so thrilled with the results she emailed Dr. Vega because she couldn't wait the 2 weeks for the follow up appointment to express her appreciation and satisfaction. During the follow up visit, the reporter again had a little more done around the eyes specifically targeting the "crows feet".

As a certified dermatologist with a medical degree from the University of Florida, Dr. Janelle Vega is well qualified to provide comprehensive background information about Xeomin or other solutions containing botulinum toxin formulated to eliminate wrinkles, folds and glabellar lines. In addition to offering Xeomin for smoothing glabellar lines, Dr. Vega also provides a variety of injectable dermal filler treatments and minimally invasive cosmetic dermatology procedures at the Mayoral Dermatology facility in Coral Gables, Florida, where she has developed a large and loyal clientele.
