with an invitation to BlogTour NYC and the AD Home Show. "This tour in March has an entirely new twist, it's all about learning. So aside from visiting the Architectural Digest Home Design Show, BlogTour will participate in classes that range from food photography to mixology. It will be the most "hands on" tour ever. I am thrilled to receive this wonderful acknowledgement and opportunity."

Faith Sheridan is a leader in creating luxury interiors tailored to the lifestyles of the Pacific Northwest.

A warm palette, fabrics woven in the ikat or dyed in shibori traditions and most importantly, restraint, are signatures of her interiors, which bridge the gap between diverse eras. She is fearless when it comes to the creation of custom furnishings, especially rugs, largely because of her understanding of color. As a past member and contributor to the first Benjamin Moore Residential Color Advisory team, she helped define the Color Palette Initiative that determines future color trends. Sheridan holds a Master's Degree in Counseling Psychology with a minor in Philosophy from Creighton University in Omaha and started her career working with inner city, gifted and special needs teenagers before transitioning to interior design. She launched her eponymous firm in Omaha in the late 80s designing estate homes and a collection of trophy rooms before making her home in Portland and then Seattle.

Sheridan is a professional member of ASID and Past President of the Oregon ASID chapter.
