

OWASSO, OK, September 14, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- Network Dominators believes that working from home is a wonderful option for individuals who are ready to take on the network marketing field. However, working from home presents many unique challenges that are not encountered in the typical office environment. As such, it is important that individuals who choose this professional route are able to navigate these challenges in a way that allows them to maximize productivity while enjoying their work.

An article published by The Guardian highlights many of the distractions that individuals might run up against when working and living in the same space. The article explains: "Those who work in busy offices with noisy colleagues and constant interruptions may see working from home as a chance to focus and get more done in blissful silence. But if you work from home for more than the odd day at a time you'll probably discover that working in such a familiar place presents its own distractions that prevent you from being as productive as you'd like [...] I asked home-based workers about their greatest distractions in a survey on my website and their response, in descending order, was family, neighbors, housework, and the lure of food and drink."

The professionals at Network Dominators agree that these are very real challenges for individuals who are working from home. But with the right approach, these issues can be overcome and professionals who opt to work from the home environment can be just as productive.

"First and foremost, it is important for people working from home to establish a workspace," asserts a representative from Network Dominators. "Whether this is a home office that is based in a room totally dedicated to this purpose or a nook in the kitchen that acts as a business area, this particular part of the house should only be used for work. This will enable individuals to better click into work mode when they enter the space and keep them focused on the task at hand."

Additionally, the representative explains, keeping the distractions of housework and eating at bay can be accomplished by establishing a solid routine. "All too often, issues like laundry, vacuuming, and doing the dishes eat into working hours. Furthermore, it can be quite tempting to snack all day while sitting just a few feet from the kitchen. By creating a routine, home-based professionals can make sure that their housework is complete before work starts and can set in place a healthy diet--instead of overindulging. Try dedicating an hour or two every Sunday to cleaning in order to start the work week with a fresh home that doesn't demand your attention."

The professionals at Network Dominators know that the distractions that come with working

Network Dominators Unveils Solutions to the Challenges of Working from Home

Written by Australian Business

from home are very real, but with these tips professionals can overcome these challenges and keep their productivity levels high.

ABOUT:

Network Dominators is an organization that serves to assist professionals in achieving financial freedom and professional stability through network marketing opportunities. These professional positions allow individuals to drive the growth of their businesses while managing their own work/life balance, resulting in a higher degree of happiness. Working from home allows professionals to enjoy flexible business hours while also generating income. Through the organization's guidance, numerous individuals have built businesses that have allowed them to thrive both personally and professionally.