

ATLANTA, GA, September 19, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- Bad breath, or halitosis, can be temporarily caused by recently ingested food, like garlic. As soon as the body processes it completely, the accompanying bad breath will most likely go away. Smoking and dry mouth can also cause bad breath. Chewing gum can help with a dry mouth by inducing more saliva to be produced which can remove excess food particles trapped between teeth. Unfortunately, for smokers, the only way to get rid of bad breath caused by smoking would be to quit. Admittedly this is usually more difficult than it sounds, but certainly worth the effort.

Chronic bad breath that seems to have no direct cause, may be a sign of an infection. Don't ignore it; check with your dentist right away.

Lawrenceville Dental Associates, a trusted dental clinic in Georgia, advise sufferers from bad breath to follow an oral care routine that includes regular flossing and brushing one's teeth at least two times a day. Using a mouthwash, or better yet, an antimicrobial rinse, also helps in keeping the mouth free from bacteria that can cause bad breath.

Ken Tralongo, CEO of Tralongo Management, has this to say about Lawrenceville Dental Associates: "This is the best place for your entire family to get comprehensive dental care.
