

SAN DIEGO, CA, September 19, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- "Do something you love and you will never work a day in your life," said Confucius. If you love video games, perhaps you've thought of pursuing a career in game design. But with so many types of degrees and career options, it's hard to know where to start.

Game-DesignSchools.com

is the leader in providing essential information and tools about game design careers, schools, degrees and trends.

Game-DesignSchools.com understands the passion about gaming and knows the questions and desires of students pursuing a gaming career. The website constantly posts informational articles to guide students and professionals on how to pursue or enhance their knowledge in game design. For instance, the website offers articles on how to become a game producer or video game designer. For professionals who want to up their skills, there is information on online courses in areas like programming, game design theory, graphic design, marketing, computer science and business.

The website also delves into what one can expect when taking a course in game design, game design theory, effects animation, 3D modeling or storyboarding. It also shines light on the various different skills--like writing and mathematics--a professional game designer is expected to have. Salary, a common question people have, is covered extensively as well.

Most importantly, Game-DesignSchools.com offers a complimentary tool that matches people with schools in their area and online. This matching process is done based on the person's interests and location.

A degree in game design could provide students with the relevant knowledge and experience they need to translate into the job market. Being aware of industry trends, career options and available schools is the first step to success. Game-DesignSchools.com provides all of this by offering the resources and tools one needs to step into a gaming career.

Game-DesignSchools.com provides information on game design degrees, schools, careers, and trends for anybody interested in gaming. Additionally, the website presents valuable information and resources that can help you become successful in your game design career.

For more information, please visit Game-DesignSchools.com .