Written by Australian Business

LOS ANGELES, CA, September 22, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- The historic fifty year old building located off of the corner of Fairfax and Pico is one that has seen a lot of business, and is perfectly suited for the next chapter of growth for Punch TV Network. It has moved into a prime location settled right in the heart of the film industry. The job of updating such a visible spot was left to the creative associates at Beasley Designs & Print. CEO Roy Beasley stated in an interview, "We appreciate the opportunity to create a business relationship with a rapidly evolving company such as Punch TV." Beasley, a veteran in the creative industry, has been in the graphic design and printing arena for a tenure exceeding twenty-five years. Owner of The Zoo Production Studios, he is spearheading current production content by The Zoo for Punch TV Network; in fact, the business relationship between Punch and BD&P sprouted from prior talks regarding production for the network. As Punch TV contemplates being a publicly traded company, they will continue to support local private businesses, and appreciate the premium work completed by The Zoo and Beasley Designs & Print.

Punch TV is ready to start production. Currently the home to one of the largest green screens in the county, Punch TV welcomes all who are innovative and creative to walk through the door. Also equipped with a top of the line broadcasting center, Punch TV is the hottest new network for those who are "thirsty" for quality media.
