

TAMPA, FL, September 24, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- With the holiday season fast approaching, it is best to map out a holiday spending plan so this season of merriment and good cheer does not end up in a post-holiday hangover brought about by overspending. Clark & Washington, a noted Tampa bankruptcy law firm, gives some suggestions to prevent racking up those credit card charges that lead to post-holiday blues.

Start with a budget that includes not only limits for gifts, but also allowance for travel, hotels, entertainment, etc. The holiday season can be a whirlwind of parties, events and such occasions that can easily deplete your resources and cause you to go over your budget. Having a budget helps you rein in your expenses when you get dangerously close to the limit. Be sure everyone in your family is aware of the financial bottom line and help one another stick to it throughout the holidays.

Additional prudent advice from these successful Tampa bankruptcy attorneys is to pay for your purchases with cash as much as possible. If you must pay for something with plastic, make sure you can pay for the items in full within the next two or three months to avoid carrying over hefty interest charges. Dealing with a heavy credit card debt after a holiday charging spree is no fun and guaranteed to dispel the good cheer of the season. Follow these simple reminders and enjoy an easy and guilt-free post-holiday time.
