CINCINNATI, OH, September 26, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- Magazines tote beautiful models with gorgeous, perfect smiles. So it's no surprise that for years people have been going to their orthodontist in hopes of gaining that perfectly straight smile. From retainers to headgear, children and adults have dealt with the stress and pain of metal braces. In 2008, approximately 78% of children under the age of 18 had braces. However, while braces may seem like a common factor of childhood, adults have also been opting for braces to fix overcrowding or to close up noticeable gaps.

However, a mouth full of metal brackets can leave adults feeling self-conscious. Nonetheless, with advancements in technology, braces are becoming less noticeable and easier for people of any age to wear. Dr. Stuart Levy, Cincinnati dentist, can offer his patients a straighter smile without the intrusive metal braces.

For those looking to get Invisalign in Cincinnati, Dr. Stuart Levy offers his patients an invisible way of straightening teeth. Invisalign is a series of customized, clear, removable aligners that move teeth. Each aligner has been created based on imaging data from each patient's mouth, and each one is worn for about two weeks before another aligner replaces it. Since Invisalign is clear, patients of any age or profession don't have to be self-conscious about wearing braces. And they are easier than the traditional metal braces because there are no food or drinking restrictions.

"Invisalign is a great alternative to regular braces. Especially for those who don't want to worry about certain foods getting trapped or pulling on their braces, Invisalign is the way to go," says Dr. Levy, Cincinnati dentist. "Since the aligners are removed before you eat or drink, there are no restrictions or issues with brushing or flossing, as you might have with more traditional braces."

Furthermore, Invisalign is also a more comfortable option. With conventional braces, the metal and wires can cause abrasions in the mouth. However, with Invisalign's advanced technology, mouth abrasions are a thing of the past.

"Another wonderful feature of Invisalign is that the process is more convenient than traditional braces," says Dr. Levy, Cincinnati dentist. "Since Invisalign technology is more advanced than other braces, patients spend less time in the dentist's chair." Unlike regular metal braces, which need frequent adjustments, Invisalign wearers typically come in once every six weeks to check progress.
