

ATLANTA, GA, September 26, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- Atlanta termite control specialists Team Pest USA offer tips on how homeowners can ward off termites. These pests feed on wood and are notorious for causing extensive amounts of damage to residential and commercial buildings every year. The worst part, note the Atlanta pest control professionals, is that oftentimes the issue goes unnoticed.

Many termite species can be hard to detect, as they live in areas that people don't have access to, for instance inside walls and foundation supports. During certain times of the year (namely their swarm season), you may be able to spot the wings left behind by the males. If you notice these inside your house, the best course of action would be to contact termite control in Atlanta.

Clear Away Debris and Protect Your InvestmentAt any rate, preventive measures can save you the time and money of this hassle altogether, and with that there are a couple items to address. Since termites are attracted to wood, the number one thing you can and should do is restrict their access to all wooden structures. In addition to laying a barrier between your home's foundation and the soil, any decks or patios should also be protected.

According to Brandon Pelfrey, Owner of Team Pest USA, "Termites hold the title for being one of the worst pests; they are resilient and can be incredibly difficult to get rid of. Only build with pretreated wood and paint the exterior and interior of your home every once in a while, as these are commonly known termite defense strategies."
