The company explains that the new appointments are central to their future plans as they strive for 200 % growth over the next 18 months.

Stewart Davis, the Group Commercial Director, who joined the company in April of this year, led the appointments. Stewart's resume shows over 20 years of experience in the recruitment services sector. He is also an Ambassador for the Institute of Recruiters, which helped PayMatters officials recognise his keen eye for the recruitment services business. Before making the transition into PayMatters, Davis has held a number of board positions and also previously been a Regional Director for the REC's Institute of Recruitment Professionals. His extensive experience helped Davis feel more confident about leading the company's ambitious new growth strategy.

The five new appointments show an interesting transition for this vibrant company. Mike Lee joined the board as the Statutory Sales Director, a position that he is more than qualified for. As an individual who provides rich input with a fresh perspective, it was no surprise that he was invited to join the board. The third appointment went to Peter Langham, who also holds the record for being the company's very first employee. Before he started at PayMatters, he worked for the Diplomatic Service, which allowed him to work in various countries and gain valuable expertise.

The company appointed Jon Biddle as the Director of Payroll Services due to his experience in the recruitment and automotive sector.
