

ATLANTA, GA, September 27, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- The Roswell pest control company, North Fulton Pest Solutions, talks about ways you can keep insects out of your home and office. The southern region of the country has experienced quite a bit of rainfall in the last couple of months, which has caused an increase in the number of encounters people are having with bugs. Contrary to popular belief, rain is not a pest deterrent. It may cause some pests to burrow, but for many other species it means taking shelter in homes and buildings.

Keeping the Bugs out If your house is not bug-proof, then the chances of ants, cockroaches, spiders, and other critters finding their way inside is very likely. The Roswell wildlife control pros say ants in particular are notorious for this type of behavior. They are typically attracted to food when the weather is warm, but excessive rainfall in effect damages their mounds or nests and essentially forces them to migrate to drier areas that are more suitable for nesting. The Roswell mosquito control business says one great way to monitor and control this activity is the professional placement of insect monitors and baits. This process will aid identifying potential entry points, and elimination of the ant colony.

According to Blake Edwards, Vice President of North Fulton Pest Solutions, "Cockroaches can be kept away by ensuring all cracks and crevices are fully sealed. Since they also have the ability to submerge themselves in water for up to seven minutes, they have also been known to swim up drain pipes. As a precautionary measure, flush pipes with hot water at regular intervals."

The best course of action to keep bugs and rodents out of your home is to secure all possible points of entry.
