

Punch TV Welcomes the Neighborhood into Their New Home

Written by Australian Business

LOS ANGELES, CA, October 02, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- On Thursday, October 24, 2013, Punch TV is opening its doors, allowing for a private social meet and greet. The city's politicians, political leaders, business owners, the community's leaders, and some industry executives are on the guest list. The event starts at 2pm and goes until 7pm at the Punch TV Studios: 5907 West Pico Blvd, West Los Angeles, CA 90035.

Not only is this occasion an open house for the new studio, but also an opportunity to find out more about exactly what Punch TV stands for. Joseph Collins, CEO, will be speaking on behalf of the network, discussing the platform of concerns regarding the community. The input of the company's surrounding community is vital, because Punch TV strives to work together with nation's residents to help this thriving community become even better. Collins will also speak about the new directions Punch TV is exploring; new programming, new films, and the possibility of becoming a publicly traded company.

Punch TV is excited for the opportunity to let the community visit their new home, and they wait in anticipation for others to share in their celebration.