

ATLANTA, GA, October 02, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- If you are planning to file for bankruptcy in Atlanta

without an attorney, Clark & Washington urges you to reconsider. The laws governing the filing of bankruptcy are complex and very technical. They not only vary from state to state but also undergo many revisions over time. While the government recognizes the right of an individual to file for bankruptcy "pro se," or without the services of an attorney, this well-known and trusted Atlanta bankruptcy law firm strongly cautions ordinary citizens against filing for bankruptcy on their own.

A single misstep or a simple filing error is sometimes enough to cause the dismissal of a case, which otherwise would have qualified successfully for bankruptcy. Ignorance of bankruptcy laws could lead to the loss of the protection granted by the automatic stay. This is one of a debtor's most important defenses against an overly aggressive debt collector.

The government protects the rights of its citizens to file for bankruptcy; but it cannot guide them in the process. Filing for bankruptcy in Atlanta, Georgia may not be the same as filing for bankruptcy in another city in a different state. Only an experienced bankruptcy attorney can help you maneuver the maze of rules and regulations that accompany most bankruptcy filings.
