

The Artist's Garden Reflects on Making the Most of Outdoor Living Space

Written by Australian Business

PHILADELPHIA, PA, October 03, 2013 /24-7PressRelease/ -- The Artist's Garden is proud to help clients make their home more beautiful through the use of scenic and peaceful outdoor living areas. Whether the individual resides in an urban area or a rural community, maximizing this part of the residence is important when adding value to the home. The company covers all aspects of outdoor living, including hardscape design, garden stonework, patio installation, planting, and lighting.

The professionals at The Artist's Garden explain that a simple concept is the best way to make a smaller garden space beautiful and calm. Someone who reviews pages and pages worth of home design magazines may find that they have dozens of concepts they would like to try, but doing so will only make the space feel cluttered and unmanageable. Instead, it is best to focus on installing hardscape elements such as walks, walls, and a patio.

These pieces help to establish boundaries and define areas, while setting the tone for the rest of the garden. It adds structure and life to the space, without overwhelming a tiny area.

"Expansive gardens can handle more elements than a smaller space. When there is a limited space to work with, it is best to focus on one or two design elements to avoid making the area look cluttered. A garden is supposed to be a place of serenity and natural beauty, not someplace that feels overwhelming. A few major elements direct the focus and stand out, without cramping the smaller space," explains the team.

Clean lines and minimal pops of color are the best bet for a smaller outdoor living space. Straight lines take up less room and maintain a clean visual flow. Purple accents work well against larger amounts of green, and round planters will quickly soften up any sharp corners found in the garden, notes The Artist's Garden.

For those looking to make one area stand out in the outside living space, it is smart to make the front door the focal point. The front door is the most important feature of a home's front yard, and has the ability to shape the entire look of the house. Homeowners might want to try painting the front door a shade of green that works well with the lush landscaping found in the yard. Other popular choices include purple or chartreuse. For those looking for a low maintenance way to improve the entire look of the home, focusing on the front door is a smart option. The team at The Artist's Garden explains that a fresh coat of paint on the front door can breathe new life into the entire residence, without taking up a lot of time or money.

"Many homeowners are interested in improving the look of their home, but are unsure exactly how to do this without throwing tons of money into the process. A new coat of paint on the front door works wonders when it comes to revamping the whole home. A tired, dated looking home looks bright and new with an eye-catching color. It truly is amazing how this one small touch can work wonders," explains the team at The Artist's Garden.

The Artist's Garden Explains How to Use Plants to Define a Space The Artist's Garden explains that using pieces of natural landscape is an effective and beautiful way to define an outdoor living space. Instead of building walls, which can look abrasive and stark, many homeowners prefer to plant hedges. They serve the same purpose, but keep with the calming and beautiful aesthetic. Evergreens work well for a year-round sense of structure and beauty. This landscape is useful for a number of different purposes, including separating areas from the driveway and parking area or drawing the focus to certain areas in the yard.

"For people interested in preserving the calm aesthetic found in their outdoor living space, lush hedges are the perfect choice for establishing boundaries and lines without ruining the flow of the garden. There are a number of different types of plants that work well, depending on the homeowner's taste," explains the team at The Artist's Garden.

A homeowner may want to save money on a deck and a patio, but poor quality, cumbersome pieces only make a small garden look smaller. Instead, a person should maximize their outdoor living space by investing in sturdy, beautiful pieces. This may include a structure made of wood that houses chairs and tables where people can sit and relax. Others prefer to get a fire pit, thus adding to the social nature of the space. While not all parts of the outdoor living design process need to be expensive, there are some components where skimping actually hurts the overall look of the area, explains the team at The Artist's Garden.

Focusing on shade is another terrific way to make an outdoor living space more enjoyable. During hot summer days, there are few things better than being able to sit outside and enjoy without sweltering under the sun. There are a number of patio umbrellas and canopies that look elegant, are functional, and are not accompanied by a hefty price tag. The professionals at The Artist's Garden explain that these pieces can enhance the look of the area, while also making it more functional throughout the day.

The choice of seating can also greatly impact the way the area looks. There are a number of appealing seating options, including metal seating sets, teak dining sets, wicker seating sets, wood patio furniture, and chaise lounges. These items make the space inviting, and also contribute to the appearance of the area. The choice of furniture truly depends on the type of look the homeowner is going for.
