is currently planning his family's next big vacation for the upcoming winter.

"Since we love to ski, I was thinking about going to a new resort in Colorado that we haven't visited yet," he explains. Michael Mitrow and his family are veteran skiers in the state of Colorado, so this process isn't as easy as it sounds. "Of course there are the big resorts like Vail and Aspen, but we would like to try a smaller, lesser known resort this time," he states. Mike Mitrow and his family are adventurous by nature, as they like to travel and explore new areas. This curiosity extends to their passion for skiing, and they like to try different resorts each time they ski.

Colorado has almost 30 major ski resorts throughout the state, many of which are world renowned. Skiers can choose from resorts on traditional mountain peaks to less common flat topped mesas. This range in mountain type provides for a variety of terrain and different skiing conditions for skiers of all levels. With such variety, it's no wonder that Colorado attracts skiers from all around the world each year. Michael Mitrow and his family are happy to be a part of that crowd, as they love the variety of resorts in Colorado. Mike Mitrow explains, "We like that all of our experiences in Colorado have been different. No two resorts are the same, which has made for great family memories." With all the resorts and types of skiing that Colorado has to offer, Michael Mitrow and his family are looking forward to their next vacation!
