Social media followers will also have the benefit of staying up to date on the latest dental advances and procedures through articles and links posted on the sites.

It's not hard to find reasons to practice good oral hygiene or to consistently keep up with the recommended dental check-ups. At your checkups, your dentist is not just examining your teeth and gums, he's checking your entire mouth for changes or signs of a problem. Suspicious new growths or lesions that may be early signs of oral cancer can be spotted by your dentist, as well as problems with the gums that may signal underlying issues like diabetes or vitamin deficiencies. Your bite and jaw are examined at every checkup and your dentist assesses the function of your temporomandibular joint (TMJ).

Daily brushing and flossing is of course beneficial, but only professional cleanings can remove plaque and tarter that build up on teeth. Plaque is a sticky film that develops on the teeth and leaves a bumpy texture when felt with the tongue. It forms when bacteria in the mouth attaches to sugar and starch residue left on the teeth from food. These bacteria eventually produce acid, which wears down the protective enamel of the teeth.

When plaque is not regularly removed by an Alameda, CA dentist it hardens into a similar substance called tarter. Eventually, plaque and tarter will erode the gums and may cause infection that can lead to gingivitis, periodontal disease and tooth loss.
