

LAS VEGAS, NV, August 30, 2014 /24-7PressRelease/ -- That Adopted Girl launches "I AM WORTHY" line on Cafepress.com/thatadoptedgirl to spread the message of self worth in a society that feeds on making people feel like they are not enough. Our society is so focused on superficial value that we forget to pay attention to personal value. Ads are literally meant to make people feel like they aren't good enough, or that they don't have enough and just one more thing could make them worthy.

That Adopted Girl, Juliana Whitney, says "I was inspired to create the I Am Worthy products while I was writing about adoption. I realized that there are mothers and fathers questioning whether they are worthy of parenthood, there are kids questioning whether they are worthy of a family and then I just got to thinking about all the other people out there doubting themselves for one reason or another."

A lot of people doubt themselves. They question whether or not they are worthy of what they desire in life. Some even question if they are worthy of what they have. Let's empower adults and children to believe and acknowledge that they are worthy of love, friendship, respect, life, health, success, etc.

That Adopted Girl spreads awareness and provides support in the areas of adoption, mental illness and self empowerment, in a raw, real and honest way through the eyes of an adopted kid.

I Am Worthy products remind you everyday of your value as a human being and in turn inspire you to remind others of their value. It is a message to carry with you for the rest of your life!

What are you worthy of?
