For more than five decades, Denbro Plastics has provided injection-molded plastic name plates and tags, custom signs and car emblems to the automotive, industrial OEM, recreation and product manufacturers and advertising specialty product markets.

Denbro was founded in 1963 by Bob Denison and Harlan Brown. Their mission of 'name plates for industry' was very successful and through the 1960s and 1970s, they grew substantially. In 1980, a fire destroyed the company, but with the help of family and friends, became profitable once again. In 1993, current owner, Jack McKisson, purchased the business and continued the tradition of producing high-quality plastic name plates.

About Denbro Plastics Founded in 1963, Denbro Plastics provides high-quality plastic nameplates to the automotive advertising, industrial OEMs, recreational equipment manufacturers, and advertising specialty item industries. Denbro Plastic's custom plastic nameplates and automotive nameplates are found on desks, walls, trucks, cars, campers, machinery, appliances and recreational products throughout the United States, Europe and Latin America.
