

Coastal Printworks Finds Winning Combination with Digital and Screen Printing

Written by Australian Business

(PRLEAP.COM) North Hollywood, CA - Coastal Printworks, Inc., the popular Los Angeles based screen printing and embroidery company, has found a winning combination by providing screen printing and digital printing to better meet the needs of their clientele. The utilization of both methods allows Coastal Printworks the ability to fulfill a wide spectrum of orders, drawing on the strengths of both processes while maintaining high output capabilities. This comes as good news to companies throughout the greater Los Angeles area and beyond seeking high quality print jobs on tee shirts, sweatshirts, hats, tote bags, corporate and athletic team wear, and more.

Over the past decade, Direct to Garment (DTG) digit printing has come a long way from its introduction. It was originally created for small print jobs and could only be used for white t-shirts. However, DTG printing is now capable of full color, high-resolution images on shirts of any color. Today digital printers have also increased their output capacities averaging 30-60 shirts per hour, and have become the go-to technology.

Recently, Coastal Printworks purchased 3 Brother 782 Digital Printers for their 15,000 square foot facility in North Hollywood, California. These high capacity printers allow Coastal to produce approximately 1500 shirts per day, making them one of the only printers in the Los Angeles area capable of such a high digital printing output.

Despite the advancements in digital printing technology, screen printing remains the standard for high quantity orders throughout the industry. Where a single digital printer can deliver up to 60 shirts per hour, screen printing can produce about 600 per hour.

By successfully utilizing both methods, Coastal Printworks has gained an edge over their competition and can uniquely meet the printing needs of virtually any sized order.
