PHOENIX, Arizona (November 11, 2013) Cirtcele Electric is announcing a promotional offer geared towards active military personnel and their households. The company is extending a 25% discount on all services through the end of the year.

Company founder David Specht was compelled to offer this promotion because he knows that the holidays can be tough on families who are missing loved ones that are serving the country. He stated, "Holidays are about family and I know not having family members present can make it that much harder. It's the least I can do to show my respect for those who are protecting the freedom that you and I enjoy every day." Specht also mentioned that holidays could bring on opportunities for electrical emergencies as so many want to setup holiday decorations, which often involved lighting and extension cords (Specht does not recommend using extension cords).

The holiday season is sadly one where we see an increase in electrical related fires. Specht sites a few common causes of these fires being "space heaters, overloaded circuits, use of extension cords, and outdated appliances or wiring... and just add a dry Christmas tree to that mix." Specht encourages anyone who has questions to contact him no matter how small they seem because it's better to get good advice than end up with an electrical fire.
