

(PRLEAP.COM) Abstract Mechanical , a provider of plumbing, heating & air conditioning installation and services based on Long Island, New York, is emphasizing to their customers and to all homeowners and businesses on Long Island that they need to ensure that all of their various heating, cooling and plumbing systems are properly prepared for the coming winter months.

With the recent announcement by the Farmer's Almanac that the coming winter months will be harsh, especially in the Northeast, home and business owners on Long Island need to take these predictions into consideration while planning their course of action to prepare their homes and businesses. Another factor to consider is the possibility of Nor'easters that pack a devastating punch, much like 2012's Superstorm Sandy, which could result in providers of winterizing services to be overwhelmed with emergency service requests.

The team at Abstract Mechanical has been anticipating the coming winter as predictions for a harsh winter are reported and for this reason they want to ensure that their customers and all of the people and businesses on Long Island plan their own personal winterizing preparations. Among these would be preparing air conditioners for the months of dormancy as well as being battered by the elements, having heating systems serviced so that they are in optimum working condition to provide necessary warmth for the properties and inhabitants and also prepping all aspects of their plumbing prepared so that drops in temperature will not result in frozen lines with the potential to rupture.

Abstract Mechanical assures their customers that they are ready to answer any service call need in the event of an unexpected, weather-related issue with any of these vital systems but they would rather that they help their clients to avoid any issues before they happen. The Abstract Mechanical team stresses that while there is an expense related to pre-winter system service and preparation, not taking steps now to protect these vital systems could not only result in the avoidable cost of repairs but also unnecessary discomfort and hardship for homeowners and potential lost business for companies forced to close due to damage and repair.

Abstract Mechanical is a plumbing, heating & air conditioning company based on Long Island, New York, providing services to all areas in Suffolk & Nassau Counties. Our highly-trained technicians can install a quality heating system for your home at an affordable price. We are committed to offering our customers reliable service, fast response and quality, guaranteed workmanship. We have been servicing customers commercial and residential since 2006 and our staff boasts over 15 years of industry experience. Call for a Free Estimate 631-698-9600 or find us online at www.longislandplumbers.net .

