M CA, November 27, 2013 — Fast Haul, a junk hauling company serving the San Francisco Bay Area, has created an infographic highlighting the amount of trash produced, the percentage of waste recycled, and the impact of recycling in America since the 1960's. As illustrated on the infographic, America as a nation has come a long way with their recycling effort and is now recycling over 34% of the waste created by consumers. The bad news is, we continue to produce an increasing amount of waste at an alarming rate.

As a proud Bay Area "Green Business", Fast Haul's philosophy has been to make everyone a priority from their customers, to the community, to their employees and last, but not least, the environment. They are dedicated to providing inexpensive, professional trash hauling and junk removal services with the commitment to recycle as much of the materials that they collect as possible. Fast Haul recycles over 50% of all materials they haul and regularly donates to the Goodwill, Salvation Army, Habitat for Humanity and other local charities.

Fast Haul customers can trust that their junk will be disposed in a responsible eco-friendly manner. According to Julie O. from Orinda, CA, "I had a loveseat, soft, heavy table with 4 chairs and an old pellet stove that I needed disposal of. I called Fast Haul at 9am and by 11am all the stuff was gone! I like the fact that they try to recycle wherever possible instead of just dumping stuff in the landfill. They were professional, efficient, and reasonably priced. I even got the Yelp 10% off discount. I would definitely use them again." (Source: <http://www.yelp.com/biz/fast-haul-walnut-creek-5>)

Fast Haul hopes to spread the message of the importance of recycling and to encourage more Americans to think seriously about how they dispose of their waste. To learn more about Fast Haul, please visit <http://www.fasthaul.com>.
