

AP Translation Strengthens Patents with Global Languages

Written by Australian Business

(PRLEAP.COM) Newington, CT – AP Translations and the Language Link of Connecticut have a dedicated team of technical translators to help you translate your patent into any language you desire. Your patent translations will be drafted, edited, and proofread by experienced technical translators to ensure your patent is of the very highest quality.

Translating patents into multiple languages helps ensure that your patent is recognized internationally. This is important if you want your patent to stand up, no matter which country it is in. This gives you a sort of global patent. Most people translate their patents into English and keep one in their native language. This is because English is a widely recognized Lingua Franca. The patent holder should also keep a copy in their native language, especially if the patent was filed in their country's Patent and Trademark office. If you want to file a patent so that it applies to other countries, you will need to file in that country and provide a copy of your patent translation in the official country's language.

AP translation and the Language Link of Connecticut also provide a wide assortment of other translation services. Some of these include legal translation and the translation of business and medical documents. Documents within these categories can include emails, contracts, hospital brochures and programs, patient education materials, and employee handbooks. They also offer services for private individuals, and can translate documents such as police reports, diplomas and transcripts, and birth certificates.

About AP Translation In business since 1995, AP Translation is committed to offering quality translation services for the best price possible. They offer expert services for medical, business, legal, and technical translation, and some of their most proficient languages include French, Spanish, and German, among many others. If you need any type of professional or personal documents translated by experienced and professional translators, AP Translation has you covered. For more detail visit www.aptranslation.com .