How does one ever face the heart-wrenching experience of losing a child, for whatever reason?

However one attempts to cope with such a painful event, the power of soothing words cannot be overstated. During a funeral, for example, or an occasion set aside to commemorate his/her life, comforting lines may be called upon to console the grieving hearts.

In "Where Have All the Angels Gone?", Ginny Mellick shows one way how it can be done, with an ample illustration of angels to set the atmosphere just right for the occasion.
