

(PRLEAP.COM) April 18, 2014 - "The Puzzling Case of the Pleasingly Plump Mouse at Penny's House," a new book by Nancy Bell, has been released by Dorrance Publishing Co., Inc.

Penny and her family are used to seeing mice in their beautiful two-story house in the farm. And then a mouse comes along, the fattest mouse Penny has ever seen, the one her mother calls the pleasingly plump mouse. It is fat but it doesn't eat cheese. They set traps but it can disappear in a breeze. It is too fat to squeeze into cracks, but it can disappear, and no one will see his tracks. How elusive can fat mouse be?

About the Author Nancy Bell, former teacher and retired professional fundraiser, lives in Florida with her husband.

About the Illustrator Catherine McCluer, granddaughter of the author and illustrator, is a recent graduate of Northern Arizona and lives in Flagstaff with a cat, a rabbit and a pet mouse.
