Michael A. McManus, Jr., President and CEO, stated, "Our flagship BoneScalpel, SonicOne and SonaStar products did very well in fiscal 2013. BoneScalpel and SonicOne did particularly well with solid double-digit growth in both the U.S. and internationally. As expected, revenue from our legacy products including the AutoSonix® and the LySonix® continue to trail off as they approach end of life status. For the year these products were down $2.4 million

. Excluding legacy products, revenue from our core medical devices increased by 13% in a difficult selling environment. Our products continue to be well accepted by the surgical community around the world."

"The present healthcare procurement environment makes it more attractive for us to consign our products in the U.S. in conjunction with a commitment to purchase a set number of disposables," continued Mr. McManus. "This sales strategy results in lower early revenues but sets the stage for more consistent recurring revenue growth, which generate higher margins, in the future. In that regard, we look to expand the number of instruments placed in the field as our lead indicator for growth. More units in the field will yield greater recurring revenue at higher margins."

"During fiscal 2013 we announced that the BoneScalpel was finally approved for sale in China and we are very excited about the potential for the product in that new market in the coming years. We also continued investment in the marketing and sales of our products worldwide during the fiscal year. In that regard, we hired as our VP of Worldwide Sales with the goal of upgrading our worldwide sales team and driving more consistent revenue growth. The number of trained distributors both domestically and internationally was expanded. We added line extensions in blades, participated in the production of six clinical studies, conducted an increasing number of cadaver training labs and continued active participation in professional shows and conferences worldwide. All in all, fiscal 2013 was a solid foundational year that sets the stage for improving operational and financial results in the coming years," concluded Mr. McManus.
