LOS ANGELES, Oct. 11, 2013 /PRNewswire/ -- Cameron Y. Brock is often hailed as the motor cycle accident attorney Los Angeles residents trust most for legal representation that leads to significant results. In fact, at the Law Offices of Burg & Brock, Inc., L.A. residents will actually find a personal injury attorney team that has proven invaluable for those seeking justice for motorcycle collision cases and much more. Those in need of representation for personal injury, product liability or wrongful death will find a personal and brain injury lawyer with an exemplary track record at Mr. Brock's firm. Their success is particularly noteworthy as of late, as the threat of a suit against New York City has led many to wonder what constitutes fault in a personal injury case.

The New York Daily News reports that Lashonne Shelton, Howard Orlick and Diana Mathes have all filed notices of claim – the first step towards suing the city. The three charge that they are victims of a "trap-like" condition created by bike racks that are part of the Citi Bike program. Since launching in May, the program proved popular among some, but it also quickly drew criticism for using up valuable parking space in a city that is notoriously lacking in parking options. Now, there is evidence that the bike program is more than a nuisance – it's a safety hazard for pedestrians. "It's our claim that the bike rack was positioned in a manner that created a dangerous and defective condition," said Mark Grodberg, Shelton's lawyer.

As the premier legal minds in Los Angeles, the members of the Law Offices of Burg & Brock, Inc. are very familiar with the sort of personal injury and liability case currently making the news in the Big Apple. In fact, the prestigious law firm has handled over 5,000 cases and boasts an incredible 97% success rate and over $100 million in settlements and verdicts over that time. Mr. Brock himself has personally defended clients suffering from various injuries caused by product liability as well as improper road and sidewalk design. Issues like poor sight lines, unsafe speed humps, lack of appropriate signage or any number of similar hazards can pose significant danger to drivers and pedestrians, and Mr. Brock wants each individual to know that if they suffer physical, mental or emotional anguish, they have a right to collect just compensation.
