

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 23, 2013 /PRNewswire/ -- While it may be wishful thinking to hope for diamonds to rain down from the heavens; loose diamonds from Diamond Mansion are often described as out of this world. As a matter of fact, this month, The American Astronomical Society held a press conference suggesting that Saturn and Jupiter actually do experience "diamond rain." Atmospheric data from these giant, gaseous planets led U.S. scientists to conclude that the lightning storms form carbon chunks into graphite, then finally into diamonds. For now, there are plenty of loose diamonds to choose from at Diamond Mansion that come from this planet. One particular diamond cut gaining notice at Diamond Mansion are the Art Deco-inspired Asscher cut loose diamonds, which can be used as the stone in a simple diamond solitaire, or as the center stone in an otherworldly halo engagement ring.

Even though it may seem like an impossible dream to have celestial jewels adorning your finger, perhaps in one of the store's 3 stone wedding sets, what makes the Diamond Mansion loose diamonds special is the fact that they are the best quality on the market. All of the loose diamonds are individually certified by top gemological institutes, such as the Gemological Institute of America. Diamond Mansion provides grading reports for loose diamond with information about the cut, quality and clarity of the gem, among its other attributes. Some less reputable jewelers may offer what they say is a high-quality gemstone, but without these reports, it cannot be verified without a grading report from a third party. Diamond Mansion is committed to only providing the highest-quality diamonds to delight even its most discerning clientele.

Another enticing aspect of buying a loose diamond from the esteemed retailer is the fact that shoppers can view the diamond under a microscope, with the added bonus that the diamond experts at Diamond Mansion can help customers learn more about the components of the diamond. While terms like fire, brilliance and fluorescence may be foreign to customers buying diamond jewelry for the first time, their customer services representatives can be very helpful to learn more about these terms to those seeking the perfect stone to go with the preferred setting. Diamond Mansion's website has plenty of educational materials, allowing prospective clientele to read more about these components and determine which diamond cut would be best.

Although a perfect diamond engagement ring from outer space may be science fiction, that doesn't mean you can't get the style and quality you want right here on our own planet.
