The program called Attentive Antivirus has been dubbed a rogue antivirus application reminiscent of older FakeAV applications that plagued thousands of PC users around the world. The Attentive Antivirus program performs much of its misleading actions when it is first loaded onto a PC either through a Trojan or malicious downloaded from the Internet.

Once loaded, Attentive Antivirus will start to exhibit signs of scanning a PC for viruses and other malware threats. It will then return falsified scan results along with several pop-ups that mislead PC users into thinking their system is severely infected. These false positives, known as an old-school technique for tricking PC users, still prove to be extremely effective to extort money from unsuspecting computer users.

Attentive Antivirus has a stubborn side that researchers have outlined in several recent reports. This side involves the inability for most PC users to uninstall the application. Attentive Antivirus was initially created by hackers so that it cannot be easily removed from a computer, which may lead to other issues.
