Coming This Monday, Watch Live As We Watch All 24 Hours Of "Happy" \( PRLEAP.COM \) December 10, 2013 - New York, NY – We live in the era of 24hour diners and the 24hour news cycle, so it only makes sense that someone at some point would come up with the 24hour music video. And that someone, it turns out, is none other than the always innovative and forever dapperly dressed artist, who last week premiered his new music video for "Happy," a stylish jaunt that features celebs and common folk alike dancing around Los Angeles. But who actually has time to sit through this music video?

The Training Farm found just the person to sit through this video, all 24hours of this video to be specific, and this Monday we will be live streaming as competitive eater and titan of tenacity Tim "Eater X" Janus endures 24 straight hours of music video history. We will do our best to keep him awake and aware, supplying the champ with everything from pedicures and manicures to a yoga session and even a visit from a psychic, but you will have to tune in to see if he can see it through, and break a few Guinness world records along the way.

A man who can eat 53 hot dogs in 12 minutes should have no problem watching a 24hour music video, right?

Starting this Monday, December 9 at midnight, and finishing up at midnight, on December 10. It's all happening live at The Training Farm's NYC facility, with five cameras covering all the action. Tune in and Live Tweet along with us and your friends. Maybe even see if you kids can last all 24 hours yourself.
